

Letter from Charles Oppenheimer

September 8, 2025

Dear Reader,

When my grandfather J. Robert Oppenheimer reflected on the beginnings of the Manhattan Project, he said, "This thing will never get on the rails unless there is a place where people can talk to each other and work together."

At Oppenheimer Energy we carry that experience forward, knowing that collaboration is essential to solving the most important challenge of our time: building a reliable energy future.

Our role is simple and vital. We are project developers. We bring together utilities, investors, engineers, regulators, and communities around one table to advance nuclear energy projects that deliver lasting value. From early siting and community engagement to financing structures and construction partnerships, we are here to help keep projects on the rail with excellence at every stage, inspired by the imperative of our time.

This downloads section is where we share some of the ideas, frameworks, and lessons that guide our work. I encourage you to read through them, use them, and share them with your colleagues.

And if you are looking for a partner to help move a nuclear project from concept to reality, I invite you to reach out. Together, we can build the energy foundation for America's future.

Sincerely,

Charles Oppenheimer
